LANTHORN
YEARBOOK - CLASS of 1934
CLARKE COLLEGE

CLARKE COLLEGE ARCHIVES

To
Sister Mary Joseph B.V.M.
'82 Grateful remembrance
from
Class of '34

Foreword

Lanthorn published at the close of our college days, stores those treasured hours which have passed so fleetingly, but which, when touched by memory's taper, will become a glowing flame. We are leaving halls and associations which have grown dear in these four years, but we are taking with us memories that will abide and will live more vividly because of the printed pages of Lanthorn. As in ye olden days the lanthorn protected and preserved the flame from day to day, so will our Lanthorn protect and preserve the cherished flame of memory.

Acknowledgement

It is with a feeling of sincere appreciation that we, the Seniors of Clarke college, in this, the final achievement of our scholastic career, acknowledge our debt to the members of the faculty of Clarke college—for their sincere and zealous efforts in imparting knowledge, for their loving service so willingly given, for their ever ready sympathy and kindness, and, finally, for the inspiration which their high ideals must be to us to live true Catholic lives.

*Class
Patroness
and
Class Motto*

The Blessed Virgin Mary under the title of the Immaculate Conception was chosen by the Seniors of the class of 1934 to be their special patroness. Under her guidance the Seniors have completed their college career and under her protection they will now take up their life work. The choice was most fitting, for love and devotion to Mary Immaculate have been integral parts of their college training and imitation of her virtues has been held aloft as woman's greatest achievement.

That this ideal might more readily vitalize the activities of each day—the beautiful scriptural simile—“sicut lilium inter spinas”—culled from the miraculous poetry of the Old Testament, was selected as the class motto. It is particularly meaningful for it not only expresses the spirit of Mary Immaculate, but embodies that spirit, received from her, which should characterize the class of '34. So shall each graduate live to be an ennobling force in whatever sphere she may move, not only attaining the fulfillment of her chosen career, but upholding ideals of truth and purity, beauty and love as a “lily among thorns.”

Prospice

We stand today upon the summit of
Our college years' high mount. There are above
Us only hopes that reach into the dreams
Of our untested powers, and touch the realms
Of golden stars that shine steadfast through night's
Own blue. Secure we stand and from these heights
We see in retrospect the changing ways
We've come to this far goal. There are no days
That do not stand unscathed against the years'
Unending surety. We have no fears—
For such days we've known—of knowledge, and of truth
That do not die or ever change. Our youth
Has built immortally on firmer earth—
Than time nor shifting sands can mar its worth.
We've known the joy of peace and self-content
That follows surer days of firm intent

In duty hardly won. Two gold-cross spires
Have lifted every heart beyond desires
Of human frailty, and all our ways
Have known the peace of His great love. These days
Are bound with friendship's golden chain, and heart
Shall speak to heart across the years. A part
Of each of us must live unchanged, the same
As now we are. These days will be an enduring flame
With knowledge, truth, and friendship all as one
Deep fire from Alma Mater's torch.

Our days are done,
And that the flame may never grow less clear
Or wholly die, we build a lanthorn here
To hold its potent strength. The winds of time
Are powerless to touch its flame—sublime
It burns, and immortal it must be—
For us, it is remembrance, and pledge of fealty.

“Spartan” Activities

As freshmen the Class of '34 entered into athletic activities with the enthusiastic wholeheartedness which was to characterize all their endeavors. Although they won neither the volleyball or basketball tournaments, they caused the champions to put forth their best efforts in order to gain their laurels. Flaunting their “gay green” the freshies succeeded in being runners-up in the basketball tournament and finished third in the volleyball contest. They showed their greatest strength in the tennis tourney, when two of their members defeated representatives from the upper classes and won the trophy.

They became “Spartans” in their second collegiate year and, like their predecessors of ancient times, determined not to accept defeat. Attired in their new uniforms of scarlet and black, their class colors, they defeated each class to become the “Volleyball Champions of 1932”. As a result of their success they were awarded the Minor Sports trophy. Spirited on by this success, the Spartans entered the intra-mural basketball tournament with a new vigor. However, they still lacked the confidence and assurance of the more experienced upper classes and were forced to resign themselves to waiting another year for the coveted championship. Tennis was again their forte and the trophies were claimed when Mary Frances Heller won the singles tournament and was co-champion with Kathleen Maley in the doubles.

Despite the fact that their numbers were diminished in their Junior year, the Spartans continued their winning stride by capturing the basketball cup and two tennis trophies. Forced by the class of 1935 to relinquish their volleyball title, the Spartans entered the basketball tournament with such determination that they gained an undefeated season and were crowned champion of the Major Sport. In the tennis tourney they were again successful. Anne Mullen won the singles tournament and, with Mary Mackin, was co-champion in the doubles event.

It was in their Senior year that the Spartans achieved their greatest triumphs. With a calm assurance, they repelled every foe in both the volleyball and basketball tournaments. Nor were these victories accomplished without effort. The competition was keen, but cheered on by loyal supporters, the wearers of the scarlet and black defeated the volleyball title-holders to gain the Minor Sports trophy; fortified by thought of past victories, the Spartans won the final game of the basketball season and retained the Major Sports cup which they had merited in the previous year.

The class of 1934 did not confine their endeavors to class activities but were prominent in school athletics as well. The following were members of the various varsity basketball squads: Frances Mitchell, Mary Mackin, Anne Mullen, Frances Hurley, Mary Frances Heller and Margaret Wolfe.

The Woman's Athletic Association listed many "Spartans" among its active members. Those of the class who attained the distinction of wearing the Major "CC" are: Marie Duffy, Mary Frances Heller, Frances Mitchell, Anne Mullen and Margaret Wolfe. The Minor "C" was awarded to Linore Donohoe, Helen Jenn, Albertina Pena and Helen Seifert.

As in other activities the "Spartans" were outstanding in the sport of swimming. Marie Duffy, Frances Mitchell and Anne Mullen were among the first to become student Life Saving Examiners. Besides these students several other members of the class of 1934 held membership in the Life Saving Corps. They are: Mildred Burg, Linore Donohoe, Frances Hurley, Mary Mackin, Albertina Pena, Helen Seifert, Mary Seymour, Virginia Wagner and Lorraine Wilhelm.

The class of 1934, indeed, has an athletic record of which it can be proud. Although the "Spartans" must write finis to their athletic career at Clarke, their spirit of fine sportsmanship and undying loyalty will live on. And through the years to come the echoes of "Shoulder to Shoulder" and "Waving the Scarlet and Black" will bring back memories of many a spirited tourney fought at their Alma Mater.

Respice

The end of this enduring day is now at hand
And as a day, when just before the deep blue cloak
Of night curves slowly out across the land—
While the tallest tree throws back the last kiss of the sun
The earth stands out on every side in sculptured rest,
And peace, as a bird, is poised on slender outstretched wings—
So ends this day. Then cords of night release their hold
And rush of evening winds brings hope of days to be.

The hastening hours have brought to us such things
As prayer and truth—tears and laughter learned from friends
But closer still, and more profound, is that content
Which comes to minds in touch with God's infinitude.
With these comes aspiration high, which seeks to sear
All useless tinsel glamour to radiance not found
Within the grasping, jealous grip of time and space
But that which guides our way to all eternity.

These things we have. Sometimes we do not understand
How they may be, and so unknowingly accept
Our heritage, to find when age goes hand in hand
With memory, that they are there, though worn and scarred.
Of these are things that do not die but cling to us
Until at last when time is not we find anew
Their strength. Then stripped of all futilities they rise
In steady glowing lights of immortality.
